

For this discussion, I talked to my boyfriend. At first, he thought that it was funny that I was burning fabric, but then when I explained it to him he found it to be very interesting.

The questions he had for me that I could answer were...

- Why are we burning fabric in the first place?
- How can you tell what fabric it is from burning it?

The questions I couldn't answer were...

- How long specifically did it take for each flame to go out?
- Is that the best way to be able to tell what type the fabric is?

A question I still have...

- Do people in the professional field use this burning method often?